Flourishes.

Many of the elegant dress toilets of figured India gauze, tulle or French organdy, made up over tulle or watered silk, have the skirt arranged in a cascade and drape into Spanish flounce that varies from one-half to three-quarters of a yard in depth, its greater depth being on each side of the skirt. The flounces set on in very fine shirring, with a small, full frill at the top.

An old rule of civility says, "This needless disrespectful to bite the nail of your thumb by way of scorn or derision, and drawing your nail from betwixt your teeth, to tell them that you value not this what they can do."

An original photograph of Jack Sheppard, accompanied by George Cruikshank's sketch of Jonathan Wild, sold at Sotheby's for $20. A letter of Thackeray to Alcockworth went for $19 15s.

Is there any reason for dodging and ignoring a great and vital fact simply because a few misguided, misguided people have antiquated ideas of what constitutes morality and modesty? Reason and honesty say—certainly not. Men and women are attracted to each other because they are men and women and because it is right and necessary that they should be so attracted. The things that make a man attractive are the characteristics caused by his inherent manliness—by the strength which makes him a perfect man. The same is true of woman. There is strong attractiveness in perfect health. There is fascination and magnetism in it. A woman cannot be entirely womanly—she cannot be a perfect woman—she cannot be in perfect health. In just so much as her sickness affects the organs that make her a woman, in just so much as she loses attractiveness. This is the vital part of her health. If anything is wrong there, it may result in all manner of ill all over the body. Careless, or too busy, physicians frequently treat the symptoms of this kind of disorder as separate and distinct ailments. The symptoms are many and varied, so much so that when a woman is sick in any way, the first thought should be given to the organs distinctly feminine. About 9 times in 10 the cause of the trouble will be found there. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures all disorders of this kind. There is no guesswork about it. There is no chance about it. It is a fact that has been demonstrated in 30 solid years of extensive practice. Thousands of women have written grateful letters, who have wished the whole world of women to know the wonderful things the "Prescription" has done for them.

THE GODS ARE DEAD.

The gods are dead? Perhaps they are! Who knows? Living at least in Lempiere's undeleted. The wise, the fair, the awful, the loquacious, are one and all, I take it, to think that in some still land of lilacs and the rose. Once high they sat, and high o'er earthly shows. Once, in a stately dance and song were greeted. Once, long ago, but now the story goes. The gods are dead.

It must be true. The world, a world of prose. Full crammed with facts, in science swathed and sheathed. Nods in a stertorous to dinner doze: Plangent and sad, in every wind that blows. Who will may hear the sorry words repeated. The gods are dead. —W. E. Henley in New York Times.

WARNED IN VAIN.

Aunt Jerusha had never seen nor heard of the above, so she flung up the window and popped out her head with the grace and spring of a mechanical toy. "Laws! Mercy sakes! Waal, I never in all my life! If that don't beat the Dutch!"

Aunt Jerusha's vis-a-vis at the table near the window she had so unceremoniously flung up was a handsome young man—an artist, in fact—who had come to Sedville to sketch. He took no trouble to explain himself to its villagers, but dropped as simply as possible into the simplicity of its life.

"Mrs. Spearminit," he said mildly, "if you will close that window my backwheats and sausage will be much warmer." "Oh, but sakes alive!" she responded. "Do look quick and never mind your backwheats. Ain't that the curriestest thing you ever did see in all your born days—and there ain't the shadder of a horse to it."

Vilas Stanfield grew interested. He tore himself from his backwheats and projected his head from the window, staring down the narrow by street on which Aunt Jerusha lived with the true Sedville stare.

"Gee'n's ghost!" "What Be it a ghost?" asked Aunt Jerusha, galling in her head and looking down at him, as if one or the other of them might be growing crazy.

"I might have known that no one but Miss Waterloo could have ventured into this region with an automobile tillbury. That large will is over his head."

And riding his hat, he rushed out of the house and down the narrow, elm shaded street after the horseless carriage. "What you has struck that man?" cried Aunt Jerusha, bringing down the window with a bang, now that the show was out of sight. "What did he call it? Waterloo, was it? Wait till I go tell Sam Spearminit! I've seen a waterloo," and she hurried next door with this Wellingtonian or Napoleonic piece of news.

The news affected the Sparrethawks as it had Aunt Jerusha. They threw up the window and ejected their heads, but with no satisfactory result. Sam caught up his hat and rushed down the street after Mr. Vilas Stanfield, who sprang along in the wake of the automobile tillbury at a college acquired gait.

It was a very choice vehicle, camouflaged in dark green and upholstered in russet leather. In the middle of the seat, dressed in dark green and russet, to match the tillbury, was a very young woman maneuvering the motor as if her only desire was to keep her turnout at the top of its speed.

Vilas Stanfield could not overtake it. He called. He begged pitifully at it. He whistled. It plashed through the inequalities of the village byroad as if nothing would be allowed to stop it. In a moment it would be upon a bridge, a crumbling bit of antique architecture that Sedville had clung to as a footway long after they knew it was unable to hold even the doctor's chaise. Recent heavy rains had now all but washed away its supports. The automobile tillbury was as surely headed for an accident as any whirling express with a bowlder on the tracks. The tillbury slowed and whistled again, this time the tune he and she had sung in duet, as with this same horseless tillbury they had rolled along the hard, broad roads in southwest England.

She still whistled on.

He put his fingers to his lips and increased the strength of the whistle.

She stopped, the wheels of her carriage on the very edge of the decrepit bridge—turning white, too, but not because of the danger.

"Mr. Stanfield," she said severely as he came up, "may I ask what this means?"

"Certainly," he said, touching his hat. "You can't cross that bridge. It's not safe even for foot passengers. I saw you from my landing house window, and I came to tell you."

"Very kind, I'm sure," she said, with a little toss of her russet feathers, "but I've no wish to have you save my life a second time. We had enough of that melodrama at Bude," and she put her hands on the motor handles again.

"I'm in earnest, Miss Waterloo. You must not cross that bridge unless you want to be drowned."

"I'm in earnest, too. I shall cross that bridge, and I won't have you save my life. The obligations of having you save me at Bude is enough."

"Very well," he replied in a hard, crisp tone. "I won't save it, then. But here comes a man whom I know, Sam," he called, "show this lady how to get across by the other bridge," and, resuming his hat, he walked rapidly back to the village.

"It's nonsense," cried Miss Waterloo as soon as Vilas Stanfield was out of sight. "Of course I can go over this bridge. I have crossed two this morning that were quite as bad."

"To tell the truth, now," said Sam slowly, "he's about right. I wouldn't drive our cow over the bridge since the rain. Why, it ate the mortar right out 'tween the stones. I'll show you the way 'round by the other one."

"I haven't time," she said, glancing at the tiny chateleine watch at her jacket lapel. "I've lost over five minutes now, and I'm racing and must get back to Steepleton as fast as I can." And once more taking the motor she shot across the bridge almost to the other side, when there was a waver, a crush, a collapse, and Mrs. Waterloo and her tillbury automobile disappeared with the bridge.

"Iswan!" exclaimed Sam, "Iswan!" And, flinging off his coat, he managed to pick and scramble his way across the stream to her rescue.

"That's right," he called cheerfully. "Just sit quick and I'll give you a pull on to dry land. The thing wouldn't make such a bad boat if it hadn't wheels and had sails and would float." And he gave the tillbury a strong twitch toward shore as she gathered herself together and tottered to her feet.

"Don't do that," she cried. "I'm killed as it is, and it shakes so!"

"The young fellow knowed, didn't he?" said Sam, discontinuing his jerks upon the carriage.

"Oh, yes, I suppose so. Where did he live? Please take me to his place right away. I have no other friends anywhere about here, and my arm hurts me awfully." And in spite of her set lips she began to weep.

"Don't weep," said Sam sympathetically. "There's not water in this here little stream since the rain anyhow. Hold on a minute and I'll fish you out as fine as a new fiddle." And, seizing a plank, he extended it to her from the edge of the bank and pulled, tugged, splashed and dipped her out with it.

"Your queer buggy, or whatever it be, will have to wait there till I get some of the boys to give me a lift with it. Can you walk?" And he eyed her charge anxiously. "Cause if you can, I'll gallant you to Aunt Jerusha's."

"Aunt Jerusha's?" "Yes, that's where he stops. It's just next door to us and 'twas her that came trotting in and told us 'bout you scudding by like all possessed and no horses. So I grabbed my hat and came running up to see the show, but I didn't plan for no such grand one as this. How you gettin' on? Can you walk?"

"I will try to," she said, stopping off very slowly and catching at his arm for support. "You don't mind allowing me your arm for a little way?"

"Oh, no—that's"—And he coughed violently as he stiffly projected his elbow. "I've gallanted girls before."

They made an odd pair for the village road. She, a draggled, dripping tailor gown girl; he, a cherry checked Sedville swain, wriggling with surplus attempts to be gallant and to nobly do his duty, yet growing still more cherry checked and wrigglesome as they came within reach of the village windows.

"There be Aunt Jerusha's right over there," he said. "She'll give you camp-fire or catnip or whatever it is you want, I'll haf to go back and get my coat. Seems I forgot it." And dropping her from his arm he vanished around the barn, leaving her deserted opposite the brass knocker on Mrs. Spearminit's side door.

Miss Waterloo slowly crossed the bystreet to the side door, and, much dazed with the shock, pain and embarrassment of her condition, she raised the knocker and let it fall with a tap that brought Mrs. Spearminit to the door as if she had been waiting for it.

"Aunt Jerusha," said Miss Waterloo, for want of a more formal name, "is—does—Mr. Vilas Stanfield live here?"

"He do at present, but he's just gone up and banged himself into what he calls his study."

"May I see him a moment—that is, I think you'll have to take me in. I've had an accident. I fell through the bridge and—"

"Land er Goshen! You don't say so! Waal, now, come right in this minnit. I'm awful glad to see you, and so he'll be no doubt. Hurt, did you say? Poor thing, and you're all sorter damp. I'll lend you my wrapper while you dry off. Maybe I'd better get a doctor?"

"If somebody would send a telegram for me," said Miss Waterloo, "I would."

"Wait! Perhaps Mr. Stanfield will. He's an awful nice young man and as handsome as a picture." And shoving an old fashioned rocker toward Miss Waterloo Mrs. Spearminit rushed up stairs to the studio.

"Mr. Stanfield?"

No answer.

"Be you asleep?"

No.

"Waal, there's been an accident to the waterloo, and she's down stairs wantin you to telegram."

The studio door flew open. Vilas was past Mrs. Spearminit and down the stairs, three steps at a time, but he did not telegraph. He got the automobile tillbury from the water. He sopped it up and rubbed it down till it looked as well as when it left the manufacturer. Then, because Miss Waterloo's arm was so out of order, he got into the horseless carriage beside her and took her to her home. Later he took her to his home.—Chicago News.

Curious Surnames.

Among the curious and suggestive surnames in a certain county in north Missouri are the following: Red, Whites, Blue, Green, Gray, Brown and Black. There are also Kings, Queens, Earls, Dukes, Marquises and Lords. In animated nature are to be found Wrens, Birds, Cows, Hawks and also Hawks and Fowlers. Among quadrupeds are Wolfe, Lamb, Lyon, Bull, Stier and Redheffer. At one time, in a county in western Kansas, there lived Redwine, Sourbeer, Drybread and Pancake.—Chicago Tribune.

Bryant's Translations.

After Mrs. Bryant died, in 1866, says Henry D. Sedgwick, Jr., in The Atlantic, Bryant betook himself for consolation to the "Iliad" and the "Odyssey," which he completely translated before December, 1871, at the age of 77. There are few things more touching than this comfort tenderly given by man to man across the gap of 2,500 years. Nothing furnishes a more eloquent argument of the worth of poetry and of its profound humanity than this. The translation of Homer is a very personal matter and seems to stir some of those fires in the human breast that burn only in front of its own penates. Pope's translation was a success, Cowper's was a success, so were Lord Derby's and Mr. Bryant's. Mr. Lang and his associates, also Professor Palmer, have made excellent translations.

All these renderings are very different, one from another, and doubtless owe their respective successes to the variety among readers. There is one class of people which has never read the Greek, another that has read and forgotten, a third and small class which compares the translation and the original, and there are other persons still who condemn all translations of Homer without reading them. Bryant's work is said to be faithful to the original, but the stories of Ilium and of Olysseus feel somewhat ill at ease in English blank verse. The Greek spirit is so different from our spirit, the Greek language is so unlike our language, that almost all translations are bound to suffer from them, most of them to a great degree.

WOOL AND HIDES.

The United States does not produce enough wool nor enough hides to supply the home demand. For some reason those, or at least many of those who favor a high tariff on wool insist that hides shall be kept on the free list, though there is not an argument advanced in favor of a duty on wool that does not apply to hides. Eastern leather manufacturers want hides admitted free and tariff placed on leather and manufacture of leather. Eastern leather manufacturers want free wool, but to conciliate Western wool growers they accede to their demand for a duty on wool, provided always that the tariff on woolen goods is proportionately increased.

It is an undisputed fact that at least twenty persons would be benefitted more or less by a tariff on hides, to every individual that would derive a benefit from a duty on wool, as the proportion of the population who have cattle is at least twenty to every one who has sheep. Why, then, if the object of a tariff is to protect the home producer or manufacturer, as well as to provide revenue for the support of the Government, especially if the foreigner pays the duty, as our Republican friends say he does, not put a tariff on hides as well as wool? Is not the farmer who slaughters a few head of cattle every year to supply meat for his family entitled to some consideration from the tariff tinklers? His grain, pork, hay, etc., derive no benefit whatever from tariff legislation, while the implements which he uses in cultivating his farm, the clothing that he wears and the sugar that he uses, are all protected and their prices increased because of that protection. Under such circumstances, why refuse to put a reasonable tariff on hides and thus give him a small share of the millions exacted from the people by the trusts under the guise of protection? Surely the fact that the great leather trust is opposed to a tariff on hides should not deter those who are elected to Congress to represent the whole people, from shaping one schedule in the tariff bill so that it will benefit the farmer.

The original McKinley bill as introduced in the House of Representatives in 1890, provided for a specific duty of $1 on hides. At the instance of the leather trust, the bill, as passed, put hides on the free list. The Dingley bill, as passed by the House, puts hides on the free list, and now at the instance of the farmers and to give them a little benefit from the tariff, the Senate has amended the bill by putting a low tariff on hides, and Western representatives should see that the bill when passed should contain that clause. Let the tariff be distributed as equitably as possible so that all will share in the benefits, and as our Republican friends tell us, the foreigner pays the tax, impose a part of the tax to help out the farmer, the market price of whose surplus grain and pork is fixed in Liverpool in a market in which all the world competes.

The City Council of Pomona, Cal., has passed a most unique law governing the sale of intoxicants. It provides in substance that only two saloons will be permitted in the city, each to pay annually $1,000 license, and the proprietors to furnish a bond of $5,000 each, and they must be bona fide residents of the city. The saloons may be opened from 6 o'clock A. M. to 10 P. M., six days in the week. They shall have no frosted windows or screens of any description and the interior view must be totally unobstructed. Only one chair will be allowed in each place and that for the use of the bartender. The law also provides that if the wife, mother, sister or daughter warns the saloonkeeper to not sell to a husband, son, brother or father any liquor, and he continues to do so his license shall be revoked. There is also a provision that if any party dependent on a male person makes affidavit to that effect and that the said person is spending money for intoxicants, his name must be posted up behind the bar.

Notwithstanding the strict provisions several men have already applied for a license to conduct a saloon.

On the night of July 5th William J. Bryan will be given a grand ovation in the city of Los Angeles. A Committee from San Francisco will go to the southern metropolis and escort the distinguished orator to the city by the Golden Gate, where he will be entertained and will deliver an address on the evening of the 7th. A telegram states that on the following evening he will leave San Francisco for Oregon, passing through Sacramento at night. It seems hardly fair to give the Capital City the "go by" in this manner. Had Los Angeles or San Francisco either, in proportion to her population, given Bryan the vote this city and county did, he would have carried the Golden State by a handsome majority.—Bee.

R. L. HORTON, formerly State Controller, died at his home in Austin yesterday, aged 65 years. He was a native of Pennsylvania and came to this coast in early days. He had been engaged in the mercantile business in Austin for over thirty years and was elected to the Legislature in 1872 and to the State Controllership in 1890. He leaves a widow and three children, two of whom are married. Mr. Horton was social and obliging and he had a host of friends in Nevada.

A QUERY ANSWERED.

An Old Soldier's Ideas as to Claims for Recognition.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—In Wednesday night's query column of the Gazette, Mr. Blank asks if a man who went and fought for his country in the war is any better than a man who remained at home and looked after the property, parents, wives and daughters of those who went to the front. In answer, as an old soldier, I would state that there were some instances in which it was a man's duty to stay at home. In our neighborhood there was a young man, the son of a widow with several young children, who wanted to go to the front and fight for his country, but all the young men who did go urged upon him that it was his duty to stay at home. There were other young men who stayed at home, but they were of the class who, whenever one of the boys came home sick or wounded, or the word came that they had been killed, made it a point to pass back and forth before the homes of the mourning parents, wives and daughters and hurrah for Jeff Davis. There were other young men who served their country at home or on foreign shores certainly did so at much less risk to life and limb than those who went to the front.

The Gazette query man sneeringly answers that the stay-at-homes labor under the disadvantage of not being eligible to pensions and to march in a G. A. R. procession. Mr. Editor this is a free country, and I know of nothing to hinder the Gazette querist and the Gazette query man and their associates from forming a procession on the 4th of July, bearing a flag on which is emblazoned: "In the time of our country's need we stayed at home."

Part second—Dancing.

Tickets will be placed on sale to-day at Brooklyn's to those having invitations.

Children will not be admitted to the reception; for the reason that those to whom invitations have been issued will fill the hall, and there will be little or no entertainment for little ones.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to-day had the Cuban question under consideration on the basis of the report of the sub-committee appointed yesterday to confer with the President and Secretary Sherman.

Senator Tillman, of South Carolina made a sensational speech in the course of debate on the bringing of Chapman before the bar of the Senate.

It has been represented to the President that there is necessity for immediate action in Cuba, where it is said that there are hundreds of starving Americans and thousands of starving Cubans.

The Senate Committee on Finance reached an understanding to-day by which it was practically agreed that the debate on the tariff bill should begin on Monday, the 24th instant.

In the House Representative Castle of California to-day introduced a joint resolution for the recognition of the belligerent rights of Cubans.

A Well-Known Young Man.

Mr. Ed. Lachman is one of the best known young men in Reno. The following statement will explain itself:

"RENO, September 4, 1896.

"On Saturday last, while whistling down the steep grade beyond the Mound House, I had a fall which severely sprained the muscles and tendons about my right hip and so bruised my knee that it was swollen, discolored and painful to the touch. That evening I procured a bottle of Trib and applied it. The next day I could walk and ride easily, and after using Trib twice a day for four consecutive days I was completely cured. I never before knew the value of a good liniment. I shall not be without a bottle of Trib hereafter. Use my name if you see fit. Trib is a good article, the knowledge of which I am willing to aid in spreading.

EDMUND D. LACHMAN."

The above was written to the Trib Company eight months ago. Mr. Lachman says that the cure has proved permanent, and that many of his acquaintances have to his knowledge used Trib with advantage.

He Drew the Line.

While some of the members of the local bar were entertaining an attorney from North Carolina he told this among a good many other professional experiences:

"Though our mountain people are not educated, no Yankee can beat them in a dicker or go after a dollar with greater avidity. A rich young fellow from our place went up among them for a time to take on some health, and while there paid more attention than he really meant to one of the few beauties that live there. She was a creature of magnificent proportions, naturally brilliant and as relentless of purpose as any moonshiner that ever went after a revenue officer. She sought to recover $10,000 damages for breach of promise, and I had the young man's case.

"On the trial the girl made a star witness. When I asked her point blank if he had ever proposed to her, she replied that he had not in so many words, but his every action, look, even his tones, was a proposal. She admitted that she had not gone into a decline because of his inconstancy, but graphically pictured months of agony, unrequited longing and wounded pride. It looked bad for us.

"At this stage of the case a lank six footer from the mountains came to me and whispered that he wanted to be called as my first witness. He sternly declined to answer questions till on the stand, but reckoned that his word was good that he would pull the young fellow through.

"All I ever asked him was his name, and you couldn't have stopped him with a gun. He was the girl's husband. He had married her a week after the young man left the mountains. He had consented to her bringing the suit in her maiden name and saying nothing about her being a wife. 'But if it's so,' he roared, 'that she's been a mountain an a pluin an a dyin' after this head dude critter I ask 'im, covey fuh a divo'ce.' "The girl rushed to his arms. She sobbed that she never loved another. The case was won for me, but the young man never goes to the mountains or makes any miscellaneous bestowal of his affections."—Detroit Free Press.

Each Undid Himself.

"I was in Oklahoma when the first legislature passed the hanging law. The man that introduced the bill was I. N. Kippel. He was next door to a border outlaw, but he was a dramatic speaker, could make an impressive amount of noise, and had his measure enacted.

"While the laws of the session were being codified the clerks on the work were started by a pistol shot on the second, and, looking out the window, saw Tedd standing with a smoking revolver over his shoulder he had killed. He was the first man to be sentenced under the new act. Had he paid the penalty he would have been the example of a man who made a law to hang himself, but influence and new trials got him off with 12 years in the penitentiary.

"But that is not all. At the third session of the legislature an attempt was made to repeal the law. Harry St. John, chairman of the committee on jurisprudence, opposed this movement and held the report of the committee back. On the last day the house made an imperative demand for the report, but St. John coolly put it into his pocket, left the building and did not return until the session had expired by limitation.

"And what happened to him?"

"He went to his home in Oklahoma City, and within a few days came the terrible news that he had murdered his wife. You may call it fate, justice, accident, what you please, but it happened."—Detroit Free Press.

Orange Woman's Club.
The Woman's club of Orange, N. J., held a most interesting session on March 24, when its annual election occurred. This marked the quarter century of the club's existence. It is one of the oldest clubs for women in the country. There were but four others in existence at the time of its founding. It organized with 15 members; now it has a membership of 800 and a long waiting list. The club has become a department club, and the recording secretary, Mrs. Stanley, read a brief review of the year's work, which was followed by reports from the chairmen of each department. Each department in turn furnishes the club programme for general meetings. The department of education furnished a programme upon coeducation, also one upon the education of the Indians. The election of officers for the coming year gave the presidency to Mrs. Cushman, who has filled the place in a most able manner during the last year. The other officers were re-elected with the exception of Mrs. Stanley, who was not eligible for recording secretary, having held the place for the limit allowed by the club.

Old, but Active.
Miss Susan E. Parker, the only sister of the late Samuel P. Smith, D. D., author of the national anthem "America," celebrated her ninety-first birthday on March 17 at her home in Roxbury, Mass. For several years Mrs. Parker has been unable to leave her home, but with mental forces unabated she keeps informed in regard to all matters of public interest. Born in Boston and living here during all her many years, she has witnessed the wonderful growth of educational and reform movements cradled in this city. She has been a generous contributor to many good causes, but the education of the colored race seems to lead all others. During the past year she has made over 800 garments for the children of a mission school in Georgia.—Boston Letter

Opals and Peacock Feathers.
These are certainly the days of short shifts with superstitious. Opals have become one of the most fashionable of the jewelry spread and long extending idea that it is as common to own them as to own a pair of shoes, having come into vogue. An advantage possessed by these gems over all others is that they cannot be imitated. A paste or any other sort of falsified opal does not exist. With the passing of the opal began its fame too, the ban under which it has thus long languished. Dedications in the rich colonies of the United States have done much to bring it back to its old position in carrying out the old idea of jewelry with the new and better idea that they are unlucky to have opals.
